INSIGHT

Printed publications and catalogues are crucial career building tools. These tools are used to build profile, facilitate sales, promote a project to a funder or stakeholder and provide lasting documentation to libraries and educational institutions, who in turn use them to teach future artists, art consumers, critics and decision makers.

Publications can include images, biographical information, artists' statements, as well as critical writings about your work. They provide further Insight into your career development as an artist, or your projects aims, objectives and achievements.

A body of work or a project is often being motivated to a museum, gallery or collector long after the exhibition may have closed, or perhaps to someone who is not in a position to view the works in situ for the first time. Presenting yourself professionally and in the best possible light is critical.

Traditionally production of catalogues and publications has been expensive, requiring significant investment in design, layout and minimum print runs that exceed the budget of many artists and galleries.
